

BIG IDEA COMPETITION 2020

How to Develop Your Marketing Piece

The required element of the Marketing Design is a full-page advertisement. The ad should be laid out on an 8.5 x 11-inch page (standard page size) in any computer program you are comfortable using. You can use any word processing or graphics program you have access to (such as Microsoft Word or Microsoft Publisher). The file must be able to be saved as either a PDF or JPG file type. When naming your ad, make sure it includes the business name. For example: Prairie Hill Lawn Care Ad.jpg.

Advertisements are intended to attract people's attention, engage them about your brand and product, and then invite them to do something. An ad must have a call to action, whether it be to visit a store, call, email, or check out a website. Please refer to sample ad.

Include the following items in your project

1. Headline: A headline is typically what grabs attention. It speaks to your target audience and engages them with your message and picture. Never use your logo or business name as the main headline.
2. Picture: The headline should relate in some way to a dominant picture, graphic, or illustration. This too will help attract attention to your ad. Your headline and picture should work together to capture attention.
3. Subheadline: A subheadline adds a little more information to better connect with your target audience.
4. Text: You should have a bit of text or bullet points that outline the unique selling point of your product. After your picture and headline has drawn a reader in, the text will help make the sale to those who are very interested, but don't write too much. Keep it simple and short.
5. Slogan: A slogan is nice to help differentiate your product from others.
6. Logo: Your logo/company name should be used like a "sign off", usually at the bottom of ads, but it can go other places. They are usually used in conjunction with slogan, again to help define your unique product. Think simple, think legible printing, and think of appropriate colors. Never use your logo as a headline; you will lose points for this.
7. Contact Information: If a potential customer can't contact you, you will miss out on sales. Include a phone number, a website, an email address, and/or a physical address. Make it easy for someone to reach you.
8. Call to Action: Tell the viewer to do something after you have them interested about your product/service. They can call, stop into the store, make an appointment, or visit a website.
9. Be Creative: Keep things simple, but experiment with different layout options, multiple photos, graphics, and text.
10. Be Clear: Make sure people fully understand your product or service. Your ad should not leave any questions as to what you are selling and who may want it.

The following example is for a real company that was presenting their business idea at a competition. Note that the sales sheet includes a headline about reputation and depicts a negative situation of a messy job site. Feel free to look at magazines to see more examples of ads and how the headline works with the image.

Introducing, the Drop Inlet Protection Basket

- Reliable – sediment control solution for most 2'x3' road drains.
- Economical – welded angle iron and steel mesh for years of use.
- Common size – basket fits into road drain frame and will sit beneath the grate.
- Easy to use – uses high flow silt fence zip tied to basket for filter.
- Reduces overflow – 2"x4" lumber fits in channel iron guides to deflect run off.
- Easy to maintain – sediment can be removed with a flat bottom shovel, by removing the filter, or dumping the basket.
